Inside of Lightroom, Adobe has streamlined the Editor View. In Lightroom 5, the files are smaller. For example, my library as of this writing uses the same amount of disk space as before the upgrade (8.7 GB vs 9.6 GB). But now Lightroom is about 12 MB smaller (it was 8.5 MB as of Lightroom 4.3). I believe this has something to do with the addition of a search bar to ultimately replace the search bar I used with the proverbial forward-facing bagel in the catalog. The new search bar is now located within the top-most panel (too small to be larger than a bagel), inside the "Actions" group. I've found this slightly annoying, because I placed my "Actions" on the right side. Furthermore, the results don't tend to be the expected, rather than the obvious. Sometimes, it takes a bit of searching to even find the results in a series of photos that lend themselves to a specific search. That said, my RAW files continue to be indexed as expected. So, for me, the hidden asterisk isn't an issue that I can't manage. One of the features I liked in Lightroom 4 was the detailed, high-resolution instructions on the back panel. Those instructions are not part of Lightroom version 5 and do not work in the new version. Instead, a concise, one-page fly-through pop-up guide appears automatically when you want to do something in Lightroom. As with the former instructions are good, except that the guide appears on-screen, so often, one has to just shoot by it, instead of carefully studying it first. The flip side is that, perhaps because it is so short, it is a bit disregarded by the average user, so much so that some more useful ones don't get noticed. A great example of this was when I set my white balance, it was all black unless I looked by that part of the print, instead of watching the talk box display.

The Airbrush tool lets you create a special blend of colors that can be applied with or without transparency. Airbrushed images are often used for finishing products where you either want a solid, one-color shadow or you want a layered shadow that looks like it was applied with an airbrush. The Clone tool lets you make an exact copy of any area you choose and apply it to another area. It's great for cloning an entire desk top to a new image without changing anything. If you need to clone an image (for example, a close-up of a plant or a people figure) you can easily draw a box around the area you wish to clone and go to the Clone Options so the box becomes a control. With it, you can clone a part of your image or the entire image itself. The Eraser tool lets you blend-away the background of any area you choose. It's like having a magic eraser for your photos. It's great for blending out backgrounds that may be distracting. And with the Eraser tool, you can blend out the background of a number of different layers so you can have only the layer you want to remain in the photo. Resize an image is a handy tool. Exporting then resizing an image every time you want to post something can become tedious after a while. When you need to do it, the Resize tool allows you to select the size you want to resize your image to and move and drag it to the size you want. The Selection tool is a keyboard shortcut that lets you isolate an area of the image and then fill selection, which is like the combination of the Dodge and Burn tools. You can take an image and do the whole area of the image or you can take just what you need. You can also use the Selection tool to select an edge of your image to create a soft-edged mask (or dodge and burn). If you need the soft edged mask bigger, you can load it up using the Load selection e3d0a04c9c

It includes powerful features such as the ability to combine photos from different sources or remove distracting elements, adjust the shadows and highlights of raw images, and adjust contrast, exposure, and color, as well as perform other photo-related tasks.
